Kremlin threatens Turkey if it blocks Russian planes at Istanbul Airport MOSCOW, December 13. /TASS/. Moscow expects that Turkey's actions at Istanbul's Atatürk Airport will be temporary, as the country has vital interests in keeping its major regional hub operational, Kremlin spokesman Dmitry Peskov told reporters on Thursday.

"There are quite concrete reasons why a crisis could arise," he said commenting on Russia's reaction to Turkey's partial shutdown of Atatürk Airport due to security reasons. "This shouldn't be the reason to escalate an already highly dangerous situation to a point where it could lead to a new confrontation." Peskov noted that Russia's "highly responsible" actions were aimed at preserving the situation at the airport. "Russia's actions to preserve the situation in the Turkish-Russian aviation relation have been viewed by the Turkish side as highly responsible. Turkey's actions to detain and hold two Russian planes and to put out Russian journalists, as well as the statements of the Turkish Foreign Minister, are seen as "extremely unstable and irresponsible" by the Russian side," the Kremlin spokesman said. "We expect that Turkey's provocative steps to restrain the Russian planes and take actions with the Russian journalists in a most provocative manner will be of a temporary nature and will be stopped at the first reason," Peskov said.
