Here's the video of the "HyperMotion Technology" in action: We've now seen a behind-the-scenes look at FIFA 22. Here's the first footage of this summer's top-flight soccer game: PlayStation 4 has been updated with the first details on FIFA 22. EA Sports has also shared a brand-new trailer, via YouTube: The new trailer is both interesting and very exciting. The clip demonstrates just how much FIFA 22 will improve over the current-gen game. For example, improved lighting will make players' skin appear more realistic; new ball physics, as well as ball deformation and new player mechanics, will improve how you perform tricks like diving headers. Subsequent shots show pre-made tactics that are showcased with a level of improvement that we have yet to see in previous titles. The clips are all very smooth, too; you wouldn't know if the players were walking or running if you had never seen it before. Also, here's the new trailer, which was created in 5K and is 19 MB in size (uncompressed): As we noted in our previous story, FIFA 17 was the most successful game in terms of the day one player rating boost. Also, the new game rating is 18/20, but according to the video below, you can actually go up to a 19/20 rating. Now, there's no release date for FIFA 22, but it's very likely to arrive sometime this summer.

Studies of multidrug resistance-associated proteins (MRPs) and lung-tumor-reactive lung epithelial cells with functional MRP2 transporter activity. The development of strategies to overcome multidrug resistance (MDR) due to overexpression of efflux transporters is a key area of experimental and clinical investigation. Multidrug resistance-associated proteins (MRP) 1 and 2 have been implicated as low- and high-affinity drug exporters, respectively, in a variety of tissues. We previously demonstrated that MRP2 is functionally expressed in lung endothelial cells and a variety of small airway epithelial cell lines. These cells have also been shown to be able to extrude non-P-glycoprotein-associated drugs (P-gp substrate drugs) such as vinblastine. The aim of the current study was to determine whether lung-tumor-derived cells that overexpress MRP2 exhibit functional drug transport and if modulation of MRP
