What's new:

Museum Mini Metal Museum (also known as the Miniature World of Miniature Miniatures) was a miniature model railroad shop located in the heart of the Chicago Motor Row. Owner Al Martini began building the collection in the 1960s and his collection grew to encompass over 1,400 cars and loco-pull-engines, and 20 track layouts, over 1,400 HO scale model railroads and model vehicles, and over 1,000 HO scale model trains. It was always a part-time operation with Martini focusing his efforts on other projects such as running Martini & Woods through the 1970s. History The initial impulse to build his miniature railroad came from his construction of a two-storey miniature neighborhood. Martini completed the layout with living-room, kitchen, bedroom, and bathroom for display purposes. Several other projects were built at his home in Lombard, Illinois, including two-storey streets and houses as well as a railroad layout over 3,000 feet long and over a hundred buildings. The Miniature World of Miniature Miniatures was Martini's favorite of all his creations. The World of Miniature Miniatures was a private collection built in the confines of Martini's basement, which began when the home was renovated in 1967. It now resided in a converted 16 x 20' room of his basement and building continued through the 1970s. In 1975 Martini moved it to a much larger space in Glenview, Illinois. At this location he expanded the collection to include European-style miniature trains, locomotives, locos, freight cars and engines, and an additional several buildings, tracks, and more railroads. Upon closing, the Mini Metal Museum's collection was assumed by the Parkway S Scale Model Railroad Club in Lockport, Illinois. Today, the center and inventory of the world's largest collection of railroad miniature scenes still resides in a model railroad scene in Bridgeton, Missouri, just outside St. Louis. Locomotives and other rolling stock Locomotives, coaches, and rolling stock of all common classes are used on European-style miniature railroads. Locomotives include steam, diesel, and electric. The miniature world has its own gauge standards and locomotives, rolling stock and track based on the common used in Western Europe. The Societe Steel Waggon Ville rail road had a fleet of 180 locos - these locos were fast and powerful
