In addition to enhanced gameplay, the Real Player Motion Tech (RPMT) also provides improved gameplay visual elements. Scoring animations, defensive positioning, ball movement and player direction are now visually more realistic, especially when contrasted with performance data. The introduction of “HyperMotion Technology” on FIFA 22 helps inform game-play decisions by seeing how a player may react to a situation, such as a teammate moving into a space, or how they may adapt to a particular action, such as a long pass, a through ball or an aerial delivery. It also offers players a more detailed visual representation of how their movements – in particular, those of their feet – will impact on the ball and therefore the outcome of a play. “With the introduction of ‘HyperMotion Technology,’ our development teams have introduced a new, highly accurate form of gameplay data – accurate to within 0.02 degrees – which allows them to have a much finer granularity in their data and play-options,” said Creative Director of FIFA, Andrew Heck. “This leads to a far more player-focussed experience of gameplay, which presents a far better representation of the way the game is played. The new RPMT-technology, combined with the accurate new gameplay data, allows us to bring the game further and further in-line with the way players actually play it.” FIFA® 22 demonstrates EA SPORTS’ commitment to creating an authentic, rich and realistic football experience that stays true to the sport. FIFA 22 marks the eighth instalment in the series, with over 14 million copies sold worldwide, with many hundreds of millions more played across the platforms that the game is sold on. The new game has recently achieved iconic status among players, with over 40 million tweets and likes on FIFA’s official Twitter and Facebook pages in the run up to the E3 gaming conference. The announcement comes as FIFA is celebrating a number of landmark achievements within the past twelve months including reaching millions of fans across four million new lives. Last July, FIFA was awarded the 2017 Sports IT Award for Innovation for the fourth year running, following a survey of over 200,000 gamers. This was followed by being named the world’s most authentic and realistic football game, according to a 2016 survey of more than 140,000 gamers. FIFA 20, released in September 2017, was the fastest-selling sports game of all time, generating more than seven million pre-orders
