A: DLL is the traditional way of distribution of assemblies. A DLL is a compiled file containing all types from a given assembly. This includes assembly metadata (manifest and IL). While an Inline Assembly can be loaded only by specifying the load context. So, with inline assembly you can load the types without having any assembly metadata (i.e. it is an assembly without metadata like assembly metadata in.NET Framework are not required). / * Licensed to the Apache Software Foundation (ASF) under one * or more contributor license agreements.
